The Green Building Association of Central Pennsylvania recently honored a York County company with two awards for its architectural design and engineering work on two York renovation projects.

Springettsbury Township-based NuTec Design Associates Inc. won the Energy and Atmosphere Award for its work in the conversion of the old York County Courthouse into the York County Administrative Center, said Scott Butcher, NuTec's director of business development.

The company also won the association's Overall Excellence Award for the renovation of the former Eisenlohr Cigar Factory into York's Greenway Tech Centre. Both renovations were completed last year, Butcher said. And both are awaiting Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design certification from the U.S. Green Building Council.

The buildings were honored by several organizations. Both won the Charles G. Eyster Award for Excellence in Energy Efficiency from the York County Community Foundation, according to NuTec.
